Kim is very experienced at this level of competition and knows what is expected of her. She told us she felt really good going into the competition and that she was in a nice position. It's Kim's opinion that the Aquanuts are the most prepared club attending OTs, where there would be around 35 girls competing. Unlike the last Olympic Trials where she focused on duet performance, Kim will be concentrating on her individual event this time in order to make the first cut of 12 for the U.S. team. That number will be whittled down to nine in April for the final cut.

Annabelle also was pretty confident that she'd do really well, but also is a bit nervous. She was last at Olympic Trials at the age of 15, so she, too, has some experience and knows what to expect this time around. She wisely viewed the first time as a practice run. Like Kim, Annabelle has also focused on her individual performance... a performance she hopes will clinch a position on the first team 12.

By the way, according to Kim Probst, there's a good chance the Aquanuts coaches, Tammy McGregor and Stefan Miermont could be selected as the U.S. Olympic Coaches!
